It has been torn down 3 times so I could get the ride stance perfect for my 6'1 bod ,it is very comfortable & easy to do long cruises which is what I built it for.

It should have the custom Old School Sissy Bar & full pillion touring saddle on it ,but I lent it to my dopey older brother as he wanted to ride it in Texas (I live in Montana) & as riding down was a last minute decision instead of driving,he could not find where he put the touring seat.I am sure one of us is adopted 🤔 .

I am just doing a round trip from Dallas to DC & back,probably q bit over 2200 miles by the time I have finished visiting friends & family on the ride back,some of the guys have come from Commiefornia .

12 Do you good men travel with a support vehicle? My step father is a Vet out of the marines. He finished his three years in 67. He is 74 years old but could still take a man half his age, if he had to protect his family.

▼ permalink parent save report block reply▲ TrailerTrashKilla [S] 7 hours ago +22 / -0

22 Yeh we do, we take looking after the Wounded Warriors seriously & the support crew can hardly fit in the truck for all the spare legs,arms & hands ,it looks like a Pirate Pinata 🤪 .

They were pulling up all the time when they first set off trying to find the bad rattle in the truck before they worked out it was all the medication they were carrying for them 🤪

what we do on these long rides with the Wounded Warrior Trikes is let one of them lead the pack & they can decide when we have rest stops as suits them .They are some of the toughest men on the planet.

Our oldest Vet rider is 70 yrs old kicked ass in Vietnam & Korea.

14 Yeh I am born & bred from Montana High Country, so have the cold covered & learned to ride in the snow. We ride & work our ranch in snow every year & I spend part of the year guiding Horse Back Elk hunts into the snow covered Mountains every year ,gusty wind is the thing that pisses me off while riding more than anything .

Me & a Veteran Buddy from Afghanistan, rode DR650 ADV Bikes from London to Moscow over 5months, including in one of their worst starts to Winter in years that shut their airports due to snow .

For me & most long distance riders gusty wind is the most dangerous & uncomfortable riding cond ,these days with proper layering of clothes designed for the conditions & heated gloves /handle bars &

For all of their "live free" hype, I've yet to hear a peep out of the OMCs since all of this shit began (lockdowns/StopThe Steal). I ran into a SoS member flying his patch at the Denver protests earlier in the year. He was actually being interviewed by some sort of reporter. That was the singular sighting/mention of the OMCs having anything at all to do with the Land Of the Free being subjugated by tyranny and communism. Surprising considering how many are Vets.

Good to see there are still bikers who actually give a shit about "living free"! Godspeed!

Designated Marksman in the military, so we were trained how to deal with the cold ,I made a post on it a while ago,Here is the info of anyone is interested. -

If Washington is cold & windy it will be made worse if forced to stand around for hours or camping.I served as a Designated Marksman providing Overwatch at night in freezing Mountain/Desert conditions . Below is the C.O.L.D. system we used to beat hypothermia/frost bite .EMBRACE THE SUCK FIGHT ON

<https://i.imgur.com/6pSDT7m.png>

<https://i.imgur.com/z7OclDF.jpg>

Remember C. O. L. D. -

Clean- keep your layers clean as possible from the environment and your sweat, dip spit, food, or piss/ shit. KEEP IT CLEAN!

Overheating- Avoid it! You will become much colder in wet layers. Wet layers will take long to dry and you may not survive the process. Dress down for movement and have a layer at hand for static positions. When layering up consider how long you can fight before you begin sweating.

Loose & layered- your base layer should be snug not tight, and the rest should be loose enough to trap air. That air will be warmed by your body and thus keep you warm. Too tight and the cold will conduct right through. In most cases your outer layer should be a vapor barrier, meaning wind and water resistant, as those two things will sap your heat very quickly. Choose layers wisely so you have less to doff in an emergency and less to pack.

Dry- stay as dry as possible. As mentioned being wet will kill you in extreme cold weather. Even in above freezing temperatures you can go hypothermic if wet and hypothermia will kill you just as easily in cool weather as it will in freezing.

Top layers: base layer (silk weight) that wicks moisture away from skin and into outer layers where it can be dried by body heat IN SMALL AMOUNTS. Moderate insulating layer of the fleece and extreme layer of the puff jacket, all protected by the vapor barrier layer of the Goretex jacket. During movement I normally only have the base and vapor barrier layers. Sometimes the fleece if it's cold enough and movement is slow, like a patrol.

Bottom layers: base to vapor barrier. For me the silk weight and Goretex are enough coupled with good socks, and gaiters. For sleep or long hours in a hide/ defense I put on the puff pants.

Feet & hands: must be protected as the digits are the first to go. Contact gloves with outer mittens are my go to. Feet need good socks and boots. For static I like the puff booties and good over boots that I can move and fight in. I pack extra socks & 2-3 pairs of contact gloves.

Head: beanie & neck gaiter. I like lightweight for movement and fleece for static.

EMBRACE THE SUCK & JUST KEEP GOING -Combat Vets wear it as a badge of Pride- Trump wrote a book on it - Trump Never Give Up

2 I I were to just look at the pic and no back story it looks like it's from the 80s. In Texas no rides bikes like that or I just dont see them. I dont ride myself. Good luck brother

3 Yeh I am from Montana so we go more for Old School Cool ,but 4 of those bikes are from Texas that I rode down with .

The bike scene in Texas back in the Oil rush days was flooded with these types of new style chopr from the cashed up rig workers & a lot of old Texas Choppers were cut up for parts .

American Ironhorse Texas Chopper like this & Orange County knock offs
